- E. Write argumentative essays responding to opposing arguments and avoiding logical fallacies;
- F. Revise their prose for clarity, precision, sentence variety, correct diction, and appropriate voice;
- G. Write essays which reflect their own interpretation of the literature they read and the films they see.

Topics and Scope:

CONTENT, TOPICS & SCOPE:

Note: The following represent general criteria and typical content. Particular themes and emphases are published each year in the English Department bulletin, A HUNDRED DOORS.

Reading and Viewing:

*Students read a number of literary works and view a number of films during the semester with emphases on critical viewing and reading involving analysis and evaluation of the common and peculiar artistic devices, themes, topics, and genres of film and literature stressing often the transformation or mutual influence of one medium to or on the other.

*Students read literary and film criticism with emphasis on critical reading involving analysis, evaluation, and synthesis of ideas from class discussion.

Writing:

*Students write a significant number of essays of various lengths during the semester, amounting to 6,000 to 8,000 words.

*Course emphasizes expository/informative and argumentative/persuasive prose.

Assignment:

Note: The following represent types of assignments in English 41.

Writing:

*Out-of-class essays which require drafting/revision.

*Film critiques.

*In-class essays in response to films and literary works.

*Compositional exercises (thesis invention, arrangement, etc.)

*A journal in which students practice writing on various topics and responding to assigned course readings and viewings.

*A critical reading/viewing journal in which students take notes, respond and practice analyzing and interpreting works of literature and cinema.
