COURSE CONTENT

Student Learning Outcomes:

At the conclusion of this course, the student should be able to:

1. Describe and apply principles of literary analysis to a variety of literature by and about ethnic Americans, considering culture, subtext and context.
2. Articulate the major theoretical and analytical issues relevant to understanding a cultural group's unique experience in the United States.
3. Write critical analysis and response papers about various ethnic American literatures.

Objectives:

Upon completion of this course, students will be able to:

1. Identify central themes and concerns of the writers studied.
2. Articulate the political, psychological, social, and cultural issues that inform the literature.
3. Analyze the effects of the literary techniques used in the works.
4. Compose coherent written analyses of literary works.
5. Evaluate the merit, power, and significance of each work in comparison to other works and on its own terms.

Topics and Scope:

The following presents a sample of six possible ethnic traditions. There might be minor adjustment in topics with a different selection of ethnic traditions.

European American

1. First-generation experiences and the literature they have spawned.
2. Old-country backgrounds: escape from persecution (religious, political, cultural, racial), customs of ethnic cohesion, folklore, relevant history (political or demographic), religion.
3. Adaptation to American economic, cultural, and political conditions.
4. Reception by earlier arrivals from other ethnic groups (racism, ethnic conflict, competition for work, stereotyping).
5. Second- and third-generation experiences and the literature they have spawned (rejection of one's ethnic traditions; rediscovery of them; rising fortunes within American society; etc.)
6. Contemporary experiences and the literature they have spawned.

Asian American

1. First-generation experiences and the literature they have spawned.
2. Old-country backgrounds: escape from persecution (religious, political, cultural, racial), customs of ethnic cohesion, folklore, relevant history (political or demographic), religion.
3. Adaptation to American economic, cultural, and political conditions.
4. Reception by earlier arrivals from other ethnic groups (racism, ethnic conflict, competition for work, stereotyping).
5. Second- and third-generation experiences and the literature they have spawned (rejection of one's ethnic traditions; rediscovery of them; rising fortunes within American society; etc.)
6. Contemporary trends in Asian American literature.

Native American

1. Ancient Tales and Traditions: creation myths, the oral tradition.
2. Tribal culture, backgrounds: differences among various tribal traditions and how they show up in key tales and tale-telling traditions. Elements of culture shared among tribes (depending on specific region selected).
3. The Coming of the White Man, and the literature it spawned (approx. 1790-1890).
4. Adaptation to European American cultural traditions: Indian poetry, tales and fiction that adopt features of the European written literary tradition (approx. 1850-present). Relevant economic, cultural, political and educational backgrounds.
5. Recent and contemporary trends in Native American literature.

African American

1. Slave narratives
2. Folk traditions
3. The Harlem Renaissance
4. The evolution of Black American identity via literature
5. Contemporary trends in African American literature

Latino/ American

1. Forms of expression peculiar to the Latino/a experience.
2. Political, cultural, historical, aesthetic phenomena in Latino/American literature.
3. Old World vs. New World perspectives.
4. The Chicano/a literary tradition.
5. Contemporary trends in Latino/a American literature.

Middle Eastern American

1. First-generation experiences and the literature they have spawned.
2. Old country backgrounds: escape from persecution (religious, political, cultural, racial), customs of ethnic and religious cohesion, ancient civilizations, relevant history (political or demographic).
3. Reception by earlier arrivals from other ethnic groups (racism, ethnic and religious conflict, competition for work, stereotyping).
4. Influence of high profile events on Middle Eastern communities (Middle Eastern conflicts, September 11th).
5. Second and third-generation experiences and the literature they have spawned (rejection of one's ethnic traditions, re-discovery of them).
6. Contemporary trends in Middle Eastern American literature.

Assignment:

Students will:

1. Read up to 50 pages per class session, including background readings in history, anthropology and the social sciences, in addition to the primary reading of literary works
2. Participate in class discussion and group work
3. Produce research projects or papers
4. Write close literary analyses (two to four papers, 1,000-2,000 words each) of selected works so as to appreciate the distinctive narrative and poetic characteristics of ethnic tradition
5. Participate in classroom discussion that will explore their cultural biases and backgrounds to appreciate the ethnically-based views of others
6. Exams
