4. Use the principles of aesthetic analysis to evaluate works of art.
5. Compare and contrast the work of women artists to each other, and to relevant work by male contemporaries.
6. Recognize and identify specific works of art produced by women from the Renaissance to the present: artists, titles, periods, and dates.
7. Perform research specific to the discipline and use appropriate citation.

Topics and Scope:

I. Introduction: Art History and the Woman Artist.

A. Major issues and methodologies of the course.

1. Traditional societal limitations and cultural attitudes re: gender difference.

2. The power of institutions and discourses to control art production.
 3. Traditional vs. feminist and revisionist art histories.
- B. Historical background re: role of women in art in the Middle Ages.
1. Medieval Christian attitudes toward women.
 2. Manuscript illumination and embroidery.
 3. Participation in family workshops.
 4. Role of convents in training and education.
- II. The Renaissance in Italy: 15th, 16th, and 17th century.
- A. The Early Renaissance in Florence.
1. The absence of significant women artists due to the secularization and urbanization of society and guild exclusion of women.
 2. Portraits of women as indication of status and the Renaissance ideal, e.g. Ghirlandaio, Giovanna Tornabuoni nee Albizzi, 1448.
- B. The High Renaissance.
1. The writing of Castiglione led to increased education and art training for upper class women and the subsequent emergence of the first famous Renaissance woman artist, Sofonisba Anguissola.
 2. The role of royal women as patrons, especially Isabella de'Este.
- C. The Other Renaissance: Women artists of Bologna and Rome 16th and 17th century, Elisabetta Sirani, Artemisia Gentileschi.
- III. Northern Europe: 15th, 16th and 17th century.
- A. Calvinism and the role of women in middle-class Northern society.
- B. Representation of women in Northern art, e.g. work of Vermeer.
- C. Role of women artists in the development of still life and domestic genre painting, e.g. Clara Peeters, Judith Leyster, Maria S. Merian, Maria van Oosterwyck, and Rachel Ruysch.
- IV. France and England: 18th Century.
- A. Role of the "saloneries" in shaping the art of early 18th century France, and the subsequent backlash against these powerful aristocratic women, e.g. Marquise du Chatelet and Mde. du Pompadour.
- B. Enlightenment philosophy, especially Jean Jacques Rousseau, and changing attitudes toward women.
- C. Change from courtly aristocratic society to middle-class capitalist society.
- D. The power of the Royal Academies of Painting and Sculpture to dictate style and employment, and their restrictions against women.
- E. The phenomenal success of some women artists despite the restrictions of the Academies, e.g. Rosalba Carriera, Marie Loir, Angelica Kauffman, and Elizabeth-Louise Vigae-Lebrun.
