COURSE CONTENT

Student Learning Outcomes:

At the conclusion of this course, the student should be able to:

1. Analyze the basic concepts, terms, and theories used in the anthropological study of culture and apply them to the Native North American groups.
2. Compare and contrast socio-political systems, kinship structure, gender relations, technology, subsistence patterns, arts, and ritual among various Native North American groups.
3. Examine the varied responses of diverse Native North American cultures to policies of removal, land theft, and genocide that resulted from encounters with European and Euro-

American settler colonists such as the Franciscan Mission system in California, and the Cherokee Trail of Tears.

Objectives:

At the conclusion of this course, the student should be able to:

1. Identify appropriate terms and concepts used in the study of ancestral indigenous cultures of North America.
2. Integrate information from Native North American oral traditions, archaeology, biological anthropology, and linguistics to examine the origin of indigenous North Americans.
3. Locate on a map and describe the Native North American culture areas, as well as the traditional homelands of indigenous groups and intercultural encounters.
4. Analyze the resilient responses of Native North American societies to European and Euro-American settler colonialism.
5. Examine contemporary issues within Native North American tribal nations, including Federal recognition, termination of Federal treaty rights, health, education, and the legacy of U.S. genocidal policies, such as the Indian Boarding School systems.
